

SOCI 250 : Food and Justice

Examine the contemporary food system by looking at food production, distribution, preparation, and consumption through the lens of food justice. Apply diverse theoretical, applied, and ethical perspectives, including gender, race and ethnicity, social class, economic, environmental, and health to an analysis of the food system. Examine food justice organizations/movements working to create healthy and sustainable food systems, with a particular focus on rural food systems.

Semester Hours 3.0